USPA NEWS - The "Triumph" exhibition marks a historic moment by reflecting Donald Trump's influence on the political world, through the works of Avni Delvina. The artist uses symbols and graphic lines to reflect the existential crisis and the changes that will come after Trump's victory. The main message is the development of a collective conscience and the defense of conservative values. On an important day for the world, when the inauguration of Donald Trump marks a major turning point in the history of the United States, a special exhibition opens its doors to commemorate and interpret this historic moment. The exhibition "Triumph", titled after a sharp graphic play related to Trump's name, brings into focus a profound insight into the explosion of political and social changes that he has brought with his strength. Painter Avni Delvina, with an extraordinary vision, has used graphic lines and photomontage to create a powerful and dynamic image of this "Triumph". He uses the colors red and blue to spread a profound message.

Delvina describes his feeling when he, as an artist who has always had a deep approach to freedom, was forced to distance himself from a political reality and escape by leaving Albania, while drawing a parallel with today, a time in which a colossal alignment of the media and left-wing politics has been observed that has created a frightening atmosphere.

Adrian Devolli, another renowned painter, highlights the use of allegory and symbolism to bring to the public a reflection on the existential crisis of modern society. Delvina's works bring a strong image of an upside-down world, which seeks salvation and a new perspective on reality. At this exhibition, Pastor Akil Pano also expressed support for Trump and conservatism, emphasizing that the victory of right-wing ideas is not only a victory for the USA, but for the entire world.

In this way, the "Triumph" exhibition displays a strong and optimistic message:

This is a time when we should not become soldiers of someone else's ideologies, but rather develop a collective conscience and an awareness that will help us overcome fear and follow the paths that lead us to a more just and bright future.
